Study Examines Denigration When People Call a Place a ‘Shithole’

Release Date:
Wednesday, April 25, 2018 12:41 pm EDT

Terms:

Dateline City:
Hoboken, NJ

By tracing the use of the word and hashtag ‘shithole’ on Twitter, researchers have examined who is engaged in the stigmatizing discourse of denigration, the types of place that are stigmatized, and the responses to stigmatized places.

In a Transactions of the Institute of British Geographers study, the majority of tweets were aimed at places where the tweeter was not from, a form of othering consistent with how territories are stigmatized by those in positions of power such as policymakers, politicians, and journalists. Also, an important and gendered minority of tweets were characterized by a ‘cry for help’ and powerlessness, where the stigma was aimed at their own places.

“As well as showing what people think about other places, our research showed how people talk about the places where they live and how a significant proportion—38% of the tweets we studied—maligned the place where they live,” said lead author Alice Butler, of the University of Leeds, in the UK. “There was a significant gender difference in the way that men and women experience living in a place, and we also noted a tendency to try and separate place from self-identity.”

Additional Information
The information contained in this release is protected by copyright. Members of the media may sign up for embargoed news or to request a copy of any study please contact:

Josh Glickman (US) +1 201-748-6572
sciencenewsroom@wiley.com
Follow us on Twitter @WileyNews

Full Citation
“What does it mean when people call a place a shithole? Understanding a discourse of denigration in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.” Alice Butler, Alex Schafran, and Georgina Carpenter. Transactions of the Institute of British Geographers; Published Online: April 15, 2018. (DOI: 10.1111/tran.12247).

URL Upon Publication: http://doi.wiley.com/10.1111/tran.12247

Author Contact
Alice Butler, School of Geography, University of Leeds, at gvalrb@leeds.ac.uk.

About Wiley
Wiley, a global research and learning company, helps people and organizations develop the skills and knowledge they need to succeed. Our online scientific, technical, medical, and scholarly journals, combined with our digital learning, assessment and certification solutions help universities, learned societies, businesses, governments and individuals increase the academic and professional impact of their work. For more than 210 years, we have delivered consistent performance to our stakeholders. The company's website can be accessed at www.wiley.com.

Language:
English